Fennemore Craig Announces New Tucson Managing Partner

TUCSCON, AZ – Fennemore Craig, a leading law firm in the Mountain West, has named George Krauja as the Tucson office managing partner.

“As an invaluable member of the firm’s Business Litigation Practice Group, George will bring his characteristic level of talent and dedication to this role to help our clients, attorneys and staff thrive,” said James Goodnow, Fennemore Craig’s president and managing partner.

“I’m honored to work with such a talented group of attorneys and staff in order to help create possibilities for our clients,” said George Krauja. “I am thrilled to take on this new leadership role.”

Krauja focuses on a wide variety of business litigation practice areas, including contract litigation, real estate, securities and tax. His purview includes design and fabrication contracts in the defense and aerospace industries, construction contracts, development disputes, plaintiffs’ class action securities fraud claims and defense of securities fraud claims for issuers, officers, and brokers. Additionally, he advises clients on business dissolutions, trust and estate litigation, lender liability defense, trade secrets, non-compete matters, federal income tax and unrelated business taxable income issues, such as transaction privilege tax, use tax and rent tax matters.

Krauja graduated first in his class from the University of Arizona James E. Rogers College of Law where he was the writer and executive editor of the Arizona Law Review and earned his B.S.B.A. from the University of Arizona.
